The National Real Property Agency improved transparency and accessibility by digitalizing property tax payments, reducing the time needed to register properties by 90% of the population. They identified those in need of assistance through the Initial Administrative Census, which registers over 60% of the population in the poorest communes. The Agency has expanded social assistance programs to include unconditional cash transfers and labor-intensive public works in the poorest areas. Efficiency of revenue mobilization increased by introducing a minimum tax on the sale of used vehicles, and reducing regressive tax exemptions for certain services. Application of the minimum tax on the sale of vehicles, and removal of tax expenditures continued; and tax measures included removal of tax expenditures. The Agency has significantly reduced the time to register businesses, while reducing red tape for property owners.
